Winter Warmers

From the mountains to cities via the beach, Kate Lough picks three of the best destinations to visit this autumn and winter

Marrakech and the Atlas Mountains, Morocco

Marrakech is a feast for the senses, where beguiling colours and scents envelop you. Start your Moroccan adventure by checking into El Fenn, the Pink City's most iconic boutique hotel. Filled with exquisite spaces in a bold palette of yellow, pink and turquoise, its beautifully crafted bedrooms are matched only by the buzzing rooftop – with its pool and bar – which draws a stylish local crowd. From here, leave the hustle and bustle behind as you wind your way up to the foothills of the Atlas Mountains where you'll find Kasbah Bab Ourika, one of life's true interpretations of an oasis. Stay in one of its new garden suites (ask for Room 30) and spend your days drifting between the dreamy poolside (framed by views of snowcapped mountains), rosé-fuelled lunches under the pergola and the incredible beauty of the grounds and vegetable gardens. Utter heaven.

Villa Soro, San Sebastian

San Sebastian, Spain

Now more than ever, design-conscious foodies should have San Sebastian on their radar, due to the reopening of the stylish Villa Soro. A former 19th-century family home, surrounded by gardens and containing cosy fires for the colder months, it's a unique place to stay in the Basque region – the culinary capital of Spain. Spend your days soaking up cultural hotspots such as Museo Chillida Leku and Manterola Gallery, before evenings dedicated to hopping around the city's famed pintxos bars. If the weather allows it, cycle to the northwest of the city to La Concha beach, and stop in at the botanical gardens and Sagardoetxea, the Basque Cider Museum. San Sebastian is densely populated with Michelin-starred restaurants; book a table at famed Spanish chef Dani López's Kokotxa, an unpretentious option that takes its name from a delicious regional dish: a fish-head stew.

Tel Aviv, Israel

Autumn is the perfect time to visit Tel Aviv: hot enough for beach days, but cool enough to explore the city's cultural delights too. Bed down at the new Villa Brown Tel Aviv, which sits just steps from the beach in a revived 1980s building whose interior renovation was inspired by Italian holiday homes on the Mediterranean coast. By day, marvel at its Bauhaus architecture, stroll down one of the oldest and most renowned streets, Rothschild Boulevard, scour the flea market in Jaffa – the old town, where Soho House has opened a new outpost – and stop in at one of the city's many contemporary galleries, including The Noga. As night falls, Tel Aviv fizzes with energy, with endless watering holes and buzzy restaurants – Brut Bar and HaBasta should be high on your list.
